To Whom It May Concern,

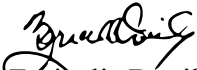

I am pleased to recommend Gregory Wright, a Ph.D. student in Counseling who served as a teaching intern during the graduate-level course COUC 505: Counseling Techniques for the Helping Profession. Over the course of the semester, Gregory demonstrated a consistent level of professionalism and care in his work with students.

He approached his teaching responsibilities with diligence, preparing thoughtfully for each class session and ensuring that course materials were organized and relevant. His interactions with students were respectful and supportive, and he maintained a positive classroom environment that encouraged participation and learning.

As a clinical supervisor, Gregory provided helpful feedback to students during triadic sessions and was attentive to their development. He was dependable and maintained a steady presence that students appreciated.

Overall, Gregory fulfilled his role effectively and contributed positively to the course. I believe he has the potential to continue growing as an educator and clinician, and I would be comfortable recommending him for future academic or professional opportunities.

Sincerely,

Zoricelis Davila, Ph.D., LPC-S
Associate Professor of Counseling
